

STUDENT PERSPECTIVES

Natali Severino Payano '15
Business major

“One of the main reasons I like Marian Court College is that I’m not just another student – I am Natali Severino Payano. Because the class sizes are small, all my teachers know me and it is easy to have a 1-on-1 conversation with them if I have a question related to the class or anything else. Everyone is so friendly here; it seems like they all care about our future and want the best for us. The school is diverse, but united. I am so happy Marian Court is a four-year college because I get to experience this atmosphere for one more year.”

“I transferred into Marian Court College with an associate’s degree from North Shore Community College. The whole transfer process was seamless, and I am completely engaged with my course work, classmates and faculty. It is great to take advantage of a small school where ‘everyone knows your name’. This has a great impact on us and studying with a gorgeous view of the ocean is like no other. I am a Criminal Justice major and am confident I will be prepared for the next chapter in my life. I made the right choice coming to Marian Court.”

HISTORY AND LOCATION

Worldwide, Sisters of Mercy trace their roots to Catherine McAuley, an Irish Catholic laywoman in 1827. Catherine recognized the many needs of people who were economically poor in early nineteenth century Ireland and was determined that she, and women like her, could make a difference. Today, there are 17 Mercy colleges around the United States. Marian Court College was founded in 1964 by the Northeast Sisters of Mercy.
